Robert Louis Stevensen – “ One Long conversation”

Marriage is one long conversation, chequered by dispute. The disputes are valueless; they but ingrain the difference; the heroic heart of woman prompting her at once to nail her colours to the mast.

But in the intervals, almost unconsciously, and with no desire to shine, the whole material of life is turned over and over, ideas are struck out and shared, the two persons more and more adapt their notions to suit the other, and in the process of time, without the sound of trumpet, they conduct each other into new worlds of thought.
